

CIRCA's training & workshops on culturally inclusive research and evaluation

Service

CIRCA offers training and workshops on conducting research and evaluation in a culturally inclusive way.

Background info

At CIRCA, we believe that research and evaluation are most effective when they respect and reflect the diversity of our communities. Led by our Director, Lena Etuk, our training and workshops equip professionals with the knowledge and tools to conduct research and evaluation that genuinely resonates with diverse cultural groups.

Overview

Our workshops discuss the principles behind culturally inclusive research and/or evaluation and concrete ways to adjust and tweak existing methods (such as logic models, theories of change, surveys, interviews, focus groups, observational methods, and reports) to make them more inclusive for diverse audiences.

What our workshops offer

Through an interactive and practical workshop, you will gain an understanding of:

- Insight into the inclusive mindset and ways to cultivate that mindset
- Factors that can affect how your research participants engage with research

- The needs of different cultural groups who may be stakeholders in a research or evaluation project– i.e., research participants, community members, program participants, program facilitators, or funders of a program evaluation
- How to make evaluation and research methods more culturally inclusive

Tailored to your needs

We work closely with you to design a workshop that aligns with your goals and interests. Whether you're looking for a brief one-hour session or an in-depth half-day training, our flexible approach ensures the content meets your needs.

Who we've worked with

Our workshops have been delivered to a wide range of professionals and organisations, including:

- Australian Evaluation Society (AES)
- The Research Society (TRS)
- The Commonwealth Evaluation Community of Practice
